FRANK E. LANGLEY, Publisher.

THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1913.

The prevailing depth of women's décollete may be described as O-high-o.

Sereno Payne, dean of the national House, denies he is to wed. A serenar pain (pitiful paradox) for him!

Events in Greece indicate there are plenty of kings where the others came from. The king industry won't be downed by the bullet of the single assassin.

Gov. Felker of New Hampshire has set April 24, as "Fast day." Yes, by that time the auto speeders will have taken to the roads—and taken the roads, some think.

After Burbank gets through experimenting with seedless oranges, etc., he might try his hand at a pinless hat for women, thereby accumulating the good wishes and the bright shickels of a long-suffering people.

A New Hampshire legislator, accused of offering his senatorial vote for money, denies the story, which seems to put the weight of proof on the accusers, who must "put up or shut up." It is their move on the checkered board.

We are told, "Harriman left $70,000,000," which reminds that all wealthy men have to leave it and which raises the inquiry again if the chase for gold is worth the while after all. It is no distinction nowadays to be known as a dead millionaire.

Score a ten-strike for Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston, who has issued an order forbidding the display of posters depicting robberies, murders, suicides and other scenes of violence as advertisements for moving picture shows. This action presupposes that he already has forbidden the display of such picture on the canvas inside the show houses, so the official action is doubly well taken. The day when the public will be beguiled by flaming posters is passing away; people look upon lurid lures as indicative of something cheap and scarcely worth while. Nevertheless, there are children and weak-minded people who will be attracted by the posters depicting violence; and it is to protect them from harmful influences that such action as that of Mayor Fitzgerald is necessary. The action of the Boston executive ought to find favor in every city or town big enough to have a theatre, whether it be a moving picture show or a vaudeville performance.

CODDLING AN INDUSTRY.

One of the most novel pieces of legislation to come before a state legislature is that introduced in the Massachusetts House to require that all granite used in public buildings in that state shall be "dressed" (presumably manufactured inside of the state of Massachusetts). When the bill was debated in the House an attempt was made to tack on an amendment, to the effect that all granite used in public buildings in Massachusetts must be native stone; but the proposed amendment did not meet with general approval because it was feared by the sponsors of the original measure that the amendment would kill the bill. It seems to us that the Massachusetts legislature might as well assert that none but Massachusetts granite should be used in public buildings as to assert that whatever stone is used must be "dressed" inside the state. Either measure would put an effective check on competition. We did not suppose that the Massachusetts granite industry had got to the stage where it must be coddled and protected to such an extent. We had supposed the industry there was still able to stand on its own feet and fight a fair battle of competition. But it seems not, if one is to judge by the bill put before the legislature at Boston and sponsored, apparently, by the members from Quincy, largely.

During the debate over the measure in the House it was asserted that if Massachusetts should pass such a bill it would result in enactment of similar legislation in other states which have great granite industries. Surely, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine and Rhode Island would not stand idly by and see themselves forced out of free business competition with retribution. Very likely Massachusetts would find

OPENING GRANITE DEPOSIT.

It Is Located in the Town of Vernon and Is Said to Be Good.

Brattleboro, March 20.—Sufficient funds having been subscribed by several interested Brattleboro men to permit starting work at a granite ledge near the Howe farm, which is being exploited by C. Victor Grant of the Charles H. Grant Granite company, seven men are now at work there clearing away the dirt from the top of the ledge.

This ledge Mr. Grant first investigated five years ago and since that time he has been a firm believer in the prospects of making Brattleboro one of the leading Vermont granite towns. Since he first made the proposition to the board of trade last winter the work of obtaining backing for the venture has been going along quietly.

Recently enough money has been guaranteed to make the start possible and it is practically certain that enough more will be subscribed so that the work may be carried on continuously to the point where it will finally take its position as one of the leading industries of this locality.

Mr. Grant expected to have a competent quarryman, foreman of a large quarry elsewhere, interested with him at the outset of this work; but owing to the delay in getting started and the fact that this particular man received a flattering offer from the firm by whom he has been employed for years to continue with them another year, he felt obliged to go on without him. Mr. Grant will have a competent foreman on the ground within a short time and work will then be pushed forward rapidly. He expects to have a large derrick in position by April 1 and the work of actually quarrying the stone will be started soon afterwards.

This proposition was first brought to public attention at the first smoker of the year of the board of trade, when C. Victor Grant, secretary of the Charles H. Grant Granite company, told of his discovery of the ledge near Vernon some five years before and of his confidence that its development would place Brattleboro and vicinity in the same class with other towns in the state as a granite center. At that time he showed samples of the granite from the ledge and the board of trade voted to do what it could toward advancing the interests of this prospective industry in the event that investigation made it seem advisable.

The ledge is located near the Howe farm in Vernon, and plenty of land south of the plant of the White River Chair company is available for the building of finishing sheds. The construction of a spur track would be a minor consideration as the ledge is so located that a spur less than a half a mile long would be all that would be necessary to handle all the material from the ledge.

MONTPELIER.

Death of Mrs. Hiram Templeton Occurred Yesterday at Son's Home.

Chancellor Frank L. Fish has ordered E. C. Gitchell to remove the buildings which he purchased from the high school site to the back of the lot, so they will not interfere with the work of building the new school. Mr. Gitchell's claim on the city for damages has not been settled and the final disposition of the buildings is still to be decided.

Dr. H. L. Watson has gone to Mt. Clemens, Mich., for treatment for rheumatism.

Mrs. Hiram Templeton died yesterday at the home of her son, H. Lee Templeton of East Montpelier, aged 88 years. For about ten days Mrs. Templeton had been ill with pneumonia. The daughter of John Vincent, she married Hiram Templeton 65 years ago, and he died in 1911. She is survived by two children, the son with whom she lived, and Mrs. Hiram Sparrow of East Montpelier also by two sisters, Mrs. Horace Lyford of Warren and Mrs. Lucy Templeton. The funeral will be held to-morrow afternoon at 1 o'clock.

The De Collaines Granite company purchased a derrick from the Clark Sibley quarry in Sodom to take the place of theirs, which was broken in the spring freshet last week, and yesterday, when the derrick was being taken down at the Sodom quarry, one of the guys became tangled, letting the strain come on the rope for ten minutes, which caused it to break and let the mast to the derrick fall a distance of 25 feet. The DeCollaines company will remove the rest of the derrick to its plant in this city and has made arrangements for a mast from the Boutwell quarries in Graniteville.
